It is the tradition of the CIFHS to use the Census return of a significant figure in Island history as part of the Census Index book cover.

The 1911 cover features the return for John Dournald (Jack) Le Breton. Jack Le Breton was the Company Sergeant-Major of D Company, 7 Battalion, Royal Irish Rifles (Jersey's Pals formation) during the First World War, winning the Distinguished Conduct Medal and the French Medaille Militaire; he was subsequently awarded an MBE for his work supporting the families of military personnel in Jersey.

Please note: In spite of the skill and expertise of those listed above, there remains the possibility of some errors. The handwriting of the enumerators, spelling mistakes or incorrect information given to the enumerator at the time of the Census can all be causes of error.

A question mark is used to indicate the uncertainty of accurate transcription.

Column Headings

The design of the 1911 book is slightly different from other books in this series. Before 1911, individual householders completed forms which were then written up by the enumerator into a standard folio book. However, the 1911 Census consists of the original householders' returns, keyed to a separate index book. Each normal return had a number written at the top right hand corner.

The CIFHS index book records these, the address and the name of the householder. For the purpose of this book, we refer to the number as the Enumerator Reference Number (ERN).

The CIFHS then effectively created the equivalent of the official folio books, transcribed onto loose sheets. To make searching for a specific ERN easier, the index contains both the ERN and the number of the page of the CIFHS transcript - which we refer to as Transcript Page (TPa)

The complete set of headings is thus:

Column 1	Surname
Column 2	Forenames
Column 3	Age (m = months; w = weeks; d = days)
Column 4	Place of birth
Column 5	Parish of residence
Column 6	Enumeration District Number
Column 7	Transcript Page
Column 8	Enumerator Reference Number

Note: Those with sharp eyes will notice four people by the name of FURZER whose entries are in italics - these are, as far as can be seen, the only people whose household was counted twice, once in St Helier District 50 and again in District 51.

JERSEY IN 1911

The Data

The 1911 Census data tells us a fascinating story about the various cross-currents that were affecting the island.

The overall population was 51,874, a fall of about 2% on the previous Census taken in 1901, and a fall of nearly 5% compared to 1891. There was a very distinct trend within this fall, however, with five parishes recording increases over the 20-year period. The biggest rises were recorded in St Clement and St Saviour, while the largest falls were recorded mainly in the northern parishes – St Ouen, St John, Trinity and St Martin – although the largest decline of all (about 14%) was recorded in St Lawrence.

There was also a slight trend towards people moving out of St Helier. In 1891 the town accounted for 54.3% of the island's population; by 1911 this had fallen to 53.2%. (These figures are significantly different from modern-day St Helier, where the population hovers around 30% of the overall island figure.)

Historically the census figures show a large preponderance of females over males, driven in large measure by the fact that at census time thousands of Jersey men would be away at sea. In 1871 over 56% of those recorded in Census were female; by 1911 this had dropped to 53.7% across the island. The only parish to exceed 55% in 1911 was St Helier.

The island remained a largely isolated community. Some 72.5% of the population were Jersey-born, and about 46% lived in the parish of their birth. However, this overall figure concealed enormous variations; nearly 70% of those who lived in St Ouen were parish-born, but the number in St Saviour was, depending on how we measure it<sup>1</sup>, either 22% or 25%. Drilling down further into the data and measuring at the enumeration district level, the most parochial district of all was the north-western corner of St Ouen around Vinchelez, where 80% of residents were born in St Ouen and nearly 89% were born in Jersey.

However, this was by no means unique. All seven districts in St Ouen, four in Trinity, three in St John, two in the rural north of St Saviour and one each in St Mary and St Brelade had populations where over 80% of residents were Jersey-born, and in only four districts in country parishes did 60% or less of the population fall into that category (and in three of those there were large entities which distorted the picture – barracks in St Peter and St Mary, and religious institutions in St Saviour).

Immigrant Communities

The term immigrant is perhaps rather misleading; what the Census permits us to measure is the numbers of people born outside of Jersey (some of whom might be foreign-born children of Jersey families). This is particularly clear due to the census forms used in 1911 in the Channel Islands having an extra column which was not present on the English forms and which asked the birthplace of the father.

The best available figures for comparison in this case are those from the 1881 and 1901 Censuses. In 1881 the largest community had been those born in England, who numbered just over 7,000; the French were next with about 4,200, and a distant third were those born in Ireland, who numbered 1,271. However, by 1901 there had been a major shift: the French-born numbered 5,836 and the English-born had dropped to 5,399, while the number of Irish-born residents had collapsed to just 623. The 1911 figures saw the trends change again, with the French-born numbers dropping back just below the English-born (5,652 and 5,666 respectively), but the Irish-born community had continued its decline to just over 500 people.

The trends for our nearest neighbours in the Bailiwick of Guernsey were not dissimilar. About 900 people born in Guernsey, Alderney, Sark or Herm lived in Jersey in 1881; the figure fell to 750 in 1901, but by 1911 it had risen to 813.

We have to bear in mind that as with the inter-parish transfers, these figures reflect net migration, but with the added dimension that measuring over time includes deaths. The answer to the dramatic decline in the number of Irish-born residents is that to a greater or lesser extent it reflects the dying-off of the influx that followed the Great Famine in the 1840s and the fact that subsequently very few people followed them.

The average figure for the French-born community concealed significant variations. There were notable hotspots, particularly between the borders of St Mary, St Peter (Augerez and Coin Varin) and across northern St Lawrence into St John, on the borders of St Martin, St Saviour and Grouville (the highest figure for a single district – 26.8% - was noted in Grande Longueville), and in the Trinity Vingtaine de Rozel. Equally, there were places where French-born residents were uncommon, most notably along the southern coastal strip and in the urban areas of St Saviour and St Clement near to St Luke's church. However, the highest concentration of French-born residents in the island was in the middle of St Helier in the area bounded by Halkett Place, Queen Street, La Motte Street, Hilary Street and Beresford Street. Fully one in three of the residents were French-born, and one of them, Joseph Cadoret, had the dubious distinction of being the only private individual to require the specialised form usually used for large institutions, as he ran what appears to be an informal boarding house.

Similarly there were large areas of the island where English-born residents were exceedingly rare. In one district (St John 5, the northern part of H rupe) there were no English-born residents at all, and in 28 of the 76 country parish enumeration districts (mostly across the north and centre of the island) their numbers were in single figures. They were rather more numerous in St Martin, but the real concentrations ran along the south coast and in the urban south of St Saviour.

The picture in St Helier is rather more fragmented, but there are still some clear trends. There were numerous large entities, and several were treated as complete enumeration districts (most notably Fort Regent, Elizabeth Castle, the Hospital and the Prison). If we remove Districts 54 to 57 (the military sites and ships in port), we are left with a population of 26866. 53.1% of them were born in St Helier (a figure higher than all the country parishes bar St Ouen); 74.4% were born in Jersey, 11.1% in England and 7.9% in France. (Of the 722 individuals in the other four districts, about three-quarters were born in England, and of the 56 Jersey-born residents about a quarter were the infant children of English soldiers).

There was a substantial overlap between districts where the most islanders and the most St Helier natives lived. The levels of Jersey-born population exceeded 80% in ten districts, six of them forming a contiguous block running north of the Parade and Union Street, west of New Street and Val Plaisant and east of Rouge Bouillon (the other districts with similarly high levels were the block south of Colomberie between Green Street and Roseville Street, and three districts north and south of Belmont Road). Nine of those ten districts also recorded the highest proportions of St Helier-born residents (the highest of all being District 23 around Peter Street and Charles Street at 71%), but with the area around Lempri re and Journeaux Streets replacing the Tunnel Street to Stopford Road district.

French-born residents were widely distributed; as discussed above, the biggest concentration of them could be found in Districts 25 and 26. That apart, the higher concentrations tended to be found in the more rural districts at the fringe of town, peaking at 22.6% around Mont Cochon. There was also a particularly high figure in District 42, which can largely be put down to the presence of Hauteville, the home run then and now by the Little Sisters of the Poor.

It is probably no coincidence that the French hotspot was also the part of town where the fewest English-born residents lived, and few English-born residents lived in the area north west of the town centre between the Parade, Rouge Bouillon, Midvale Road and Val Plaisant. The major hub of the English-born community was Districts 7, 8 and 9, the three districts which surrounded Fort Regent, but the highest concentration in one district was observed in District 39 (around Clarendon and Palmyra Roads), where 24.3% of the population were born in England.

The overall picture the data presents is one of a stagnating population. The events of 1914-18 would be ruinous to the French community, but it had already passed its zenith. Its members had bought their way into the countryside and were becoming part of the island, but the number arriving was falling. The English and others were starting to become more numerous again, but this was based in part on the slow but steady growth of tourism and retirement rather than new industry. The native community was also slowly moving away from its farming roots, as some sold up their farms to the French and moved into St Helier to live.

Little did people expect in 1911 that barely three years on from the Census, the upheaval of war would overturn life in Jersey, and a completely new phase of its history would begin.

Notable Events

Across the water in England, 1911 was a year of momentous changes – the new King, George V, was crowned at the beginning of what was to be one of the hottest summers of the century, the heat wave lasting until early September. It was a long hot summer in other regards as well: a series of strikes in the dockyards and elsewhere crippled trade, and a constitutional battle over the powers of the House of Lords, fuelled by proposals to make Government and employers partly responsible for the well-being of workers, took the country to the brink of crisis.

The backwash from these events reached Jersey, where the temperatures were equally hot, and where trade was badly disrupted by the dock strikes. Politically, matters in Jersey were significantly quieter, but not without interest, and the Coronation was celebrated with vigour.

11 January: A presentation was made to Father Raab on his leaving the island for Portsmouth.

13 January: James Flynn, a local celebrity, died in the care of the Little Sisters of the Poor.

21 January: The first General Meeting and election of officers of the Jersey Franchise and Workmen's Federation took place.

1 February: The Educational Times reported that Cyril Pepin, a 14 year-old pupil at Oxenford House School in St Lawrence, had been classed first in the UK for French.

13 February: Long service medals were presented to Chief Officer Moyses, Second Officer De La Haye, Fireman Drayton and Driver Le Cocq of the St Brelade Fire Brigade.

24 February: A new weekly journal, the Jerseyman, went on sale for the first time.

27 February: Constables Perrée of St Saviour and Voisin of St Lawrence were re-elected.

6 March: The Assizes were cancelled as there were no cases to be heard.

13 April: The first trip of the L&SWR's SS Sarnia took place.

27 April: The football match for the Muratti Cup was played at Westmount, with Jersey beating Guernsey by four goals to one.

2 June: F V Le Feuvre, Constable of St Peter, won a libel case against the Nouvelle Chronique newspaper and was awarded £15 in damages.

12 June: The Swedish naval cruiser Fylgia visited Jersey en route to the Naval Review at Spithead.

20 June: The potato trade was severely affected by the shipping strike in the UK, with prices at the Weighbridge down to 6d per cabot.

26 June: Conrad Krimmel, a soldier in the King's Own Regt, fined £2 and sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment for bigamy.

7 July: The heatwave hit Jersey, the temperature reaching 82°F in the shade.

19 July: Whilst en route to Guernsey and Weymouth with 200 passengers on board, the GWR's SS Roebuck struck the Kaines rocks off St Brelade. All hands were saved.

28 July: Mr Arthur H Worrall was appointed Principal of Victoria College.

9 August: Six privates of the West Battalion of the RMIJ were deprived of a year's service and one was seriously reprimanded following a mutiny at camp on 28-29 July.

10 August: A total of 803 French tourists arrived in Jersey on this day, 459 by the boat from St Malo, the remainder from Granville.

24 August: The Royal Jersey Agricultural and Horticultural Society held its major summer show at Springfield.

6 September: The Jersey Rifle Association concluded its shooting competition on Gorey Common. Sgt J B Le Marquand won the States' Cup; Cpl J E Colback won the Reservists' Cup and Sgt-Maj Alldridge took the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup.

12 September: Rev H W Quarrie swam from St Helier Harbour to Corbière in a time of 3 hours 18 minutes.

20 September: The drought, which began in late June, finally came to an end.

23 September: The Royal Court registered its verdict in the inquest on Elsie May Le Floch, an 11 year-old knocked down by a waggonette in St Ouen. The jury added severe comments regarding delays in admitting the child to the Hospital.

17 October: Neolithic tombs were found at Green Island.

27 October: A proposition was passed at a meeting at the Town Hall that the States obtain control of the telephone system by purchasing it from the Postmaster-General.

30 October: Thomas Cabot, Constable of Trinity, died at the age of 54.

31 October: For the first time, no births or deaths were registered during a calendar month in the parish of St John.

10 November: The States adopted the amendments to the Law on Primary Education in spite of strong opposition.

16 November: F A Jeune was elected to replace Thomas Cabot as Constable of Trinity.

20 November: An inquest took place on Violet Lilian Hill, aged 17 months. The verdict returned was that death was due to bronchopneumonia caused by extreme emaciation (she weighed 8½lb at her death) and her mother Louisa was charged with extreme neglect.

8 December: The Westaway Trustees' offer to establish a home for poor or abandoned children was accepted.

13 December: The Attorney-General Sir Adolphus Hilgrove Turner died at Gouray Lodge, aged 65.

Imports and Exports in 1881

As can clearly be seen, there was a substantial surplus of imports over exports in 1911. Part of this was undoubtedly due to the London dock strikes – potato exports were down by over 10,000 tons on the 1910 figure, although the tomato exports were rather higher. The modest quantity of motor spirit (petrol) imported shows that cars were still rare.

All figures are in tons unless otherwise specified
